Commercial Repatriation and Medical Assistance

Commercial Repatriation and Medical Assistance® (CRaMA)

Clinical Care in the Air

Medical Assistance is the interface between insurers and patients overseas. Doctors and nurses may be working as case-handlers in an office, flying as aeromedical personnel, or a mixture of both. But to facilitate a successful repatriation, medical personnel must work closely with operations staff (who provide linguistic expertise, make logistic decisions, and act as contacts with local agents, etc), travel experts (who find the most appropriate travel options, arrange ticketing, and obtain medical clearance from the airline, etc) and other logistics staff.

A good team approach where each member understands the skills and responsibilities of the others helps the decision making process, not least on the urgency of repatriation, the destination hospital or facility, and the mode of transport. This one-day course identifies the roles and responsibilities of both the office medical staff and in-flight repatriation personnel, and discusses the problems that may be encountered in the planning and execution of an assignment. A complementary approach facilitates safety, efficiency and efficacy.

The venue is Cumberland Lodge, a unique and fabulous setting. The Lodge is one of the Royal houses of Windsor Great Park, recently made famous in the film of the abdication of King Edward VIII ('Kings Speech'). Cumberland Lodge is adjacent to the home of the Queen at Windsor Castle, near to London's Heathrow Airport.
